Frieze Education Engages New York City High School Students for Fifth Consecutive Year

New York Artists, Designers, Galleries and Institutions including Matthew Day-Jackson, Bridget Donahue and Ellen Van Dusen to lead Frieze Teens Workshops throughout the 2017 – 2018 academic year

The Frieze Teens program launched this fall for the fifth consecutive year, bringing underserved New York City high school students from all five boroughs together with international artists and industry leaders. Exploring careers in the art world, Frieze Teens take part in a combination of studio visits, writing workshops and professional seminars with some of New York's most significant artists and institutions, from diverse cultural backgrounds and generations. This year's Frieze Teens program includes workshops with Bridget Donahue and Honey Ramka galleries, artists Matthew Day-Jackson, Paul DeMuro, Maia Cruz Palileo and Antonia A Perez, designer Ellen Van Dusen and The Robert Blackburn Printmaking Workshop, among others. The program culminates in the spring, with the students building on what they have learned to develop an art guide for their peers, as well as leading tours for visiting school groups to Frieze New York, presented from May 4 to 6 on Randall's Island.

Aiming to open up careers in the arts, Frieze Teens is a crucial component in the year-round Frieze Education program, supported by Deutsche Bank for the seventh consecutive year. Through the Frieze Teen workshops and onsite programming for school groups visiting Frieze New York, Frieze Education reaches hundreds of New York City students each year.

The 2017-18 cohort of Frieze Teens will learn about the conception, production, and exhibition of contemporary art, while meeting individuals from a wide range of backgrounds, ages and experiences who have built careers as creative professionals. This year's program explores the role of art in responding to political issues – from gender and racial equity to environmental and immigration challenges – and has a new emphasis on writing, with the Frieze Teens encouraged to develop their skills in critical analysis and ask incisive questions.

“The Frieze Teens program affords students rare, behind-the-scenes access to New York’s art world and some of its most inspiring figures. This year, the workshops are stronger and more relevant than ever. Exceptional artists are spending time with the students, from Matthew Day-Jackson to Paul DeMuro and Maia Cruz Palileo, and showing them how art can respond to today’s political and social questions.” said Loring Randolph, Frieze’s Artistic Director for the Americas. “We are honored to usher in the fifth consecutive year of the program, and to engage with some of the brightest young minds of New York City both year-round and at the fair.”

Each year, high school teachers from throughout New York City nominate promising high school students with an interest in the arts for the Frieze Teens program. This year’s cohort of Frieze Teens include students ranging from 16 to 18 years old, from boroughs across the city.

The 2018 Frieze Education program consists of:

- Frieze Teens: Frieze holds weekly workshops throughout the school year that introduce participating students to artists, curators, critics, gallerists, designers, and arts professionals from across the contemporary art world. These informal opportunities offer Frieze Teens a behind-the-scenes look at the art world, with student questions and conversations as the fundamental elements of each visit. Additional workshops at Frieze’s headquarters encourage students to hone their writing and critical thinking skills, allowing for deeper and more informed engagement with art professionals about their work. Through the dynamic program and student-led engagement with professionals, Frieze Teens gain a strong understanding of how they may one day pursue careers in the art world themselves. Past years’ programs have included workshops with leading art world figures and organizations such as artists Nicole Eisenman, Urs Fischer, Sara Cwynar, Dora Budor, Caroline Larsen and Jean Shin; trips to major exhibitions at city museums including The Met Breuer and the New Museum; and participation in events such as Pioneer Works’ Alternative Art School Fair.

- School Groups & Young Person’s Guide to the Fair: Frieze Education hosts an expansive program for public school groups visiting the fair from local neighborhoods, with a focus on students from neighborhoods adjacent to Randall’s Island including East Harlem and the South Bronx. The Frieze Teens lead the student group tours and also create a free interactive guide,

The Frieze Young Person's Guide to the Fair, as a resource for all Frieze New York visitors.

Frieze Teens have said that the program's in-depth approach and special access to artists and professionals has helped them to envision and plan a future in the art world. The program gives Frieze Teens a space for active questioning and creates a supportive community for them to learn more about themselves and their creative path.
